MARINE ARCHAEOLOGY AND CULTURAL HERITAGE SITE GAZETTEERS

This Appendix lists the archaeology and cultural heritage sites relevant to Offshore EIA Report Chapter 16: Marine archaeology and cultural heritage.

Table 1 is a gazetteer of all potential marine archaeology sites within the Offshore Study Area as identified by desk-based research.

Table 2 is a gazetteer of the designated onshore sites with their setting attributes within the Setting Study Area that may be affected

Table 3 is a gazetteer of all Scheduled Monuments within 60km of the offshore Project

Table 4 is a gazetteer of all Listed Buildings within 60km of the offshore Project

Table 5 is a gazetteer of the Conservation Areas within 60km of the offshore Project

Table 6 is a gazetteer of the Gardens and Designed Landscapes within 60k of the offshore Project

	Seanachaisteal, monastic settlement 300m SSE of	240765	969226	SM5392	-	-	Durness	This monument consists of a settlement, probably a pre-Norse monastery, on a rocky headland. The site occupies a rocky peninsula lying parallel to the cliffs and approached along a steep-sided knife-edge of rock. The rock surface measures about 36m by 10m and contains two terraced rows of contiguous turf huts roughly 3m square and one foundation 2.5m by 5m. There are 8 huts in the upper row and there are traces of huts in a lower row. A turf parapet runs along the upper side of the rock and may have formed the monastic enclosure.	VP1	Seanachaisteal promontory fort and monastery (see Figure , VP1) are located on a precipitous coastal promontory, and are related to two distinct periods of occupation. The promontory fort is prehistoric, likely Iron Age, in date and includes a defended hillfort and promontory fort. The monastery consists of a settlement, likely a pre-Norse monastery on a rocky headland. While both monuments are likely not contemporary, they retain a close visual relationship.
	Seanachaisteal promontory fort	240571	969415	SM5303	-	-	Durness	The monument consists of a promontory fort on a coastal headland. The promontory fort projects into the sea and is defended on all sides except the S by steep cliffs. To the S the fort is protected by a substantial rampart with a wide external ditch. Possible traces of an internal ditch are also visible. The outer ditch is about 0.7m deep and has an average width of 11m. The rampart is of stone and earth and measures about 6m across, standing 2m high above the outer ditch. The probable inner ditch is about 8m wide. Inside the area defined by the ramparts is a rocky knoll which shows possible traces of a further line of ramparts. To the N of the summit of the knoll is a horse-shoe-shaped depression which may be the foundations of a prehistoric hut	VP1	Seanachaisteal promontory fort and monastery (see Figure , VP1) are located on a precipitous coastal promontory, and are related to two distinct periods of occupation. 	Crosskirk, St Mary's Chapel and broch S of Chapel Pool	302493	970114	SM90086	-	-	Reay	The monument consists of the roofless remains of the chapel of St Mary (later used as two burial enclosures) lying E-W within a square burial ground, together with the adjacent remains of a broch and outer defensive works. St Mary's Chapel was a dependent chapel within the parish of Reay, and may date from the 12th century. In form, it resembles contemporary churches in Orkney and Scandinavia rather than those elsewhere in the Scottish Highlands, in its possession of separate nave and square-ended chancel. The walls of the chancel seem to have been largely reconstructed on the earlier foundations, possibly in 1871. The chapel was originally entered from the W through a door (now blocked) with inclined jambs. The present S door is probably modern, and may replace an earlier window. The chancel arch is similar to the W door. The N wall of the nave seems to survive to its original height, some 2.5m above present ground level, but the W and S walls are less complete. The E and W gables of the nave show that it had a pitched roof. The walls are built of whinstone slabs	VP10	Rough Grazing The site is located close to the shore on the SW side of Crosskirk Bay adjacent to modern farmland. Dominated to south-west by Forss Business and Energy Park 250m away, with 6 turbines. Its location, on a lower coastal slope means it would have been quite inconspicuous in the wider landscape The key views from the site would have been out to sea but would have had a good level of local intervisibility in the wide flat landscape including to the broch sites at Green Tullochs (SM554) 1.3km to the SW and Tulloch of Lybster (undesigned) 650m to the S.

							irregularly coursed and those of the nave are approximately 1.25m thick. The burial ground is enclosed by stone walls, and the earliest dated stone to survive is inscribed 1692. The broch lay to the N of the burial ground, and succeeded a promontory fort on the site. The remains were partly excavated between 1966-72 before demolition of the above-ground remains. The foundations and lower parts of the walls remain, though some has been lost to erosion. The dry-stone wall of the promontory fort (which had a ditch on its outer side) was penetrated near its E end by an entrance passage with a possible guard cell on its W side. To the fort was subsequently added a broch, approximately 20m in diameter, entered from the ESE and with a guard cell on the N side. The walls, filled with earth and boulders, were approximately 5m thick, and contained the base of a stair and one further mural chamber. Further structures were later built outside the walls of the broch, and occupation probably continued until at least the 8th century. A Pictish symbol stone, now lost, has been found on this site.
Ben Griam Beg hillfort	282962	941092	SM1836	-	-	Kildonan	This Scheduled site comprises a hillfort and contemporary complex of walls and enclosures below it. The fort occupies the flattish summit of the hill and at 580 m OD is the highest in Scotland. It is assumed to be Iron Age but may span a longer period than that. The fort measures 152 m by 61 m, bounded by a ruinous drystone wall, 1.8 m thick and 1 m in average height. It is flanked at a lower level by enclosures on the west and north-east. Some way below the fort on the south the remains of a wall of similar build cross the steep hillside. On either side of this wall there are traces of irregularly shaped enclosures, which seem to be made up of small plots or pounds, clearance heaps and cleared platforms set into the slope. The remote and exposed situation of the complex may indicate a temporary refuge with the steep rock-strewn hill slopes affording a good natural defence, rather than a permanent settlement.	VP11	The hillfort has extensive 360-degree views over the low-lying open landscape below and to Ben Griam Mor to the south-west. The site occupies a topographically prominent position on the summit of a distinctive, steep-sided hill in a predominantly open lower landscape of bog and moorland (High contribution of setting).
St John's Point, fort and site of St John's Chapel			SM2689				The fort consists of a mutilated earth-and-stone rampart built between two geos and cutting off fairly level promontory of St John's Point. No structures are visible within the rampart but against its rear is a well-constructed, rectangular building, locally said to be the site of John's chapel. The site has extensive 180-degree views across the Pentland Firth and over to Dunnet Head	VP15	The surrounding landscape is predominantly pasture and there are few trees.
Bein Freiceadain hillfort	305934	955790	SM530	-	-	Reay	Beinn Freiceadain rises to a height of 238m OD from the surrounding flat moorland. Together with the slightly higher twin summit of Ben Dorrery it is one of the highest hills in the N of Caithness and a notable landmark.	VP16	Rough grazing and hilltop moor On the summit of Beinn Freiceadain at 238mOD. Most wind farms in Caithness are clearly visible as are forestry plantations, but these do not impact the hilltop's prominence.

							Orkney-Cromarty Round Cairn with (?) Camster-type chamber. This cairn is situated within the fort which crowns the summit, towards its north end		As the highest point in the area, the site location occupies a topographically prominent position, visible across much of Caithness The site has extensive views in all directions. Key views to/from the site are to the group of cairns and hut circle on the NE flank of the hill (SM491, SM490, SM492, SM523) as well as to the cairns located on adjacent summits as well as to additional cairn sites to the N around the loch and the prehistoric sites around Broubster and Loch Calder
Cnoc-na-h'Uiseig chambered cairn	299680	967731	SM444	-	-	Reay	This chambered cairn, a grassy mound, has been mutilated large-scale construction work and is now slightly rectangular in shape, measuring 22.0m E-W and 17.5m transversely, by about 2.5m high. The horns are barely distinguishable on the E side. The soil-tip to the S formerly overlay the S segment, but the cairn has been 'cleaned-up' and a high mesh-fence now encloses it.	VP19	Adjacent (N and NE) to the former Dounreay Nuclear Facility and its former airfield Within low lying coastal land but dominated by the Dounreay Nuclear Facility Key views to the coast and to other prehistoric monuments on the northern slopes of the hill of Shebster. Entrance out to SE.
Cnoc Freiceadain long cairns	301286	965375	SM90078	-	-	Reay	Two long cairns. Part of a series of prehistoric monuments located on the Hill of Shebster and Cnoc Freiceadain including further chambered cairns, standing stones and stone rows.	Wireline B	Rough grazing On top of Cnoc Freiceadain hill (132m) within a modern farming landscape, with the extensive windfarm (21 turbines) of Baillie Hill / Stemster Hill located 0.7 to 2.4 km to the east Set in a conspicuous topographic location that makes them a prominent feature on the skyline. The setting would have allowed for 360° views of the surrounding landscape. Key views would have been to other funerary sites or settlement sites in the surrounding area, such as the Hill of Shebster chambered cairn, c. 750m to the south and Glaodh Odhar cairn to the west
Ness Battery, coast defence battery, Stromness	324863	1008019	SM8241	-	-	Stromness	The monument comprises the remains of a coastal battery of the Second World War, replacing one from the time of the First. At the beginning of the First World War the western approaches to Stromness and Scapa Flow through Hoy Sound were unprotected. In September 1914 the Navy therefore landed and installed on temporary mountings two 12-pounder quick firing guns at the site now known as Ness Battery, later adding another two at Point of Ness. In 1915, these two batteries were re-armed with 5" and 6" guns produced by the Bethlehem Steel Co. of America, and a third battery was added on higher ground to the NW. At the end of the War all three batteries were closed and their armament scrapped. Remains of one of the concrete gun emplacements at Ness Battery survives, just in front of the Second World War emplacements. The Second World War battery was built in 1938 and was operational before the outbreak of hostilities. Its specific role was that of close defence of the western approach to Scapa Flow and support of the examination service. Its armament consisted of two 6" breech-loading (BL) Mk7 guns on central pivot mountings, supported by two 90cm searchlights, underground magazines, an observation post, a fire command post, an engine room and other brick and concrete structures. The camp was situated immediately next to it. The battery was manned by the 141 Coast Battery until 1945, when it was placed in care and maintenance. It was re-activated for	VP24	The monument comprises the remains of a Second World War coastal battery replacing the battery from the First World War (SM13478). The battery was built in 1938 and was operational before the outbreak of the war. Its specific role was that of close defence of the western approach to Scapa Flow. A camp was situated immediately next to it. It is situated around 500m to the north of the First World War battery and retains open views across Hoy Sound and retains a visual and physical relationship with the surviving coastal defences.

							training purposes in 1950, and dismantled in 1956. Despite the dismantling, most of the immovable structures of the battery remain, including a number of the timber camp huts.
Ness Battery, gun emplacements 300m SSE of, Stromness	324956	1007762	SM13478	-	-	Stromness	The monument is a First World War coastal battery, built in 1915 and in use until 1918. The battery comprises three concrete gun emplacements and two magazines. The gun emplacements are arranged in a horse-shoe shape facing SW and S across the NW approach to Scapa Flow, the home of the British Grand Fleet. Each of the gun emplacements has two ready-use ammunition lockers built into the concrete parapet on either side. The emplacements are connected to one magazine with double semi-circular rock-cut passages and the most westerly emplacement has a single passage to the second magazine. With the exception of the guns, which were removed at the end of the First World War, the battery survives in very good condition with many of its original features intact. The coastal battery is situated on a headland to the S of Stromness, 300m SSE of the Second World War Ness Battery complex. It is situated close to the coast, now within a golf course, at around 10m above OD with good views across Hoy Sound to the S and SW.	VP24	The Ness Battery, gun emplacement (SM13478) was built in 1915 and was in use until 1918, comprising three concrete gun emplacements and two magazines. It is situated close to the coast, now within a golf course, at around 10m above OD with good views across Hoy Sound to the south and southwest. The monument retains its field characteristics to a marked degree. The three-gun emplacements and two magazines survive virtually intact, except for the guns. Its significance is further enhanced by the potential to compare this battery with numerous other contemporary defences in this area
Brough of Bigging, promontory fort, Yesnaby	321919	1015713	SM6214	-	-	Sandwick	The monument is a fort occupying a promontory on the W coast of Orkney mainland, in use probably between around 1100 BC and AD 800. The promontory measures about 170m from NE to SW by 60m transversely and is surrounded by cliffs except at its SE corner where it can be accessed by a narrow isthmus, 25m wide. Three grass-covered banks run across the isthmus, enclosing an area of approximately 1.3 hectares. Slight traces of other structures survive both on the isthmus and the promontory. At least two of the banks are the remains of defensive walls. The innermost is much reduced, measuring 4m wide and standing 0.5m high. Some 40m to the SW is an outer wall, on the N edge of a deep natural gully, visible as a grassy scarp about 5m wide and standing 0.4m high. Its outer face appears to have been of coursed drystone construction and a gap at the E end may be an original entrance. A third bank, which may be later in date, lies on the SE side of the same gully and measures up to 3m wide and stands 0.5m high. The footings of two rectangular buildings are visible close to the banks. Immediately S of the innermost bank are the remains of a possible gatehouse or forework, measuring 5.5m from NE to SW by at least 2.5m transversely, within a wall 1.5m thick formed from large edge-set stones. The grass-grown wall footings of a rectangular building, measuring 13m NE-SW by 8.4m transversely, partly overlie the NE end of the outermost bank. There are a number of features atop the promontory itself. A summit cairn and walled enclosure are relatively recent additions. At the cliff edge some 20m to the SW are the remains of a possible burial cairn, about 3.7m in diameter; at least two edge-set stones appear to mark its edge and cairn material is visible to a depth of 0.65m in the eroding section. Other surface features include a circular depression, 5m in diameter, and	VP25	The monument is a highly visible coastal landmark today, and it preserves a range of archaeological features in their original and dramatic landscape context, testifying to use of the site probably over many centuries.

a circular platform, 8m in diameter, which may represent the sites of roundhouses.

Skara Brae

HONO WHS - -
SM90246

Skara Brae is located on the very edge of the Bay of Skail, protected by modern coastal defences. When it was built, the village was situated over 1km from the sea's edge, and through the lifetime of the settlement the sea advanced towards it and this, coupled with other environmental, economic and social factors seems to have led to its eventual abandonment. The remains of the village itself are not visually prominent and during opening hours the many visitors and guides are the most visible feature of Skara Brae.

VP26
Wireline G
Wireline H

Views to and from Skara Brae are restricted to its immediate environs, with the horseshoe of hills surrounding the Bay closing off the majority of views into and out of the monument. Likewise, views to Skara Brae (or more accurately the piece of land in which the monument is situated given the fact that it has virtually no visual prominence when viewed from a distance) in the modern landscape are restricted from the east, however, views can be gained from the south and north shores of the Bay of Skail.

The landscape around Skara Brae and enclosed by the ridgelines is typical of Orkney coasts, where softer rocks have created sandy bays. Small in scale, and closely confined, the Bay of Skail is defined at its outer limit by high cliffs and within the bay by ridges and hills. It is rounded and smooth in a regular horseshoe-shape. The sheltered, enclosed, small-scale and low-lying landscape cradles by low green slopes and overlooked by steadings and cottages on the higher ground, is dominated by Skaill House and the farm buildings. However, closer to the shore the character is more maritime and provides the unique and distinctive setting of Skara Brae, with its calm stillness and deep sense of history and place in juxtaposition within the activities on the sea and the beach and the ceaseless lapping of waves in the bay (LUC, 1998).

This rural scene with its blend of working farms, coastal drama and upland areas is fundamental to the modern experience of Skara Brae but is far removed from that which existed in the past.

Key elements of Skara Brae's setting include:

- The well-defined ridgelines and higher ground that defines the edges of the visual envelope around the site
- The working pastoral of the landscape around the site
- The sensory experience of the site and in particular its relationship with the sea
- The small number of visual links to other archaeological monuments in the wider landscape

Knowes of Trotty

SM1316 - -

The monument consists of a group of Bronze Age burial mounds.

There are twelve large mounds and several smaller ones in a band of land running N-S along the limit of present-day agricultural cultivation. The largest of the mounds is almost 20m in diameter, the smallest of the twelve is just less than 6m in diameter. In addition, there are at least three much smaller mounds, while recent research on Bronze Age burial mounds suggests that there may be associated burials not beneath mounds. The most north-westerly of the mounds produced early Bronze Age artefacts during 19th century excavations.

Wireline F

The Knowes of Trotty is located within an open area of land, with relatively few modern intrusions, and while it does not have a direct visual relationship with the Heart of Neolithic Orkney WHS to the west, excavations have revealed Neolithic structural remains which were seemingly reused by the barrow builders which suggests a possible cultural/ancestral connection with it. Views to the west are across to the mountains of Hoy and the low ridgelines to the west of the WHS. The views are shadowed by the low-lying plateau to the south-west of the barrows.

Brough of Birsay carpark, Point of Buckquoy			SM1290	-	-		The monument is of national importance because of its inherent potential to make a significant addition to our understanding of the past, in particular of Pictish and Norse settlement, society, agriculture and economy. Given the size of the surviving mounds, the visible stone content (including walling), and the wealth of archaeological remains discovered during excavations in the near vicinity, especially along the Brough Road, these mounds are highly likely to contain very important structural remains and archaeological deposits.	Wireline E	The setting of the monument allows for 360-degree views of the surrounding landscape, with the immediate setting being dominated by the modern car park and interpretation boards. The monument comprises four mounds dating probably to the late Iron Age (Pictish) and Norse period (between around 500 and 1200 AD), or possibly earlier. The four mounds vary in size and form, but they are all turf-covered with exposed stone visible in places. The monument is situated on the flat promontory known as the Point of Buckquoy

Castle of Mey				-	LB1797 GDL00096	A	Mey	The Castle of Mey and its associated Garden and Designed Landscape (GDL) lies on the flat coastal plain of Caithness and is extremely exposed to the harsh climate and winds which blow off the Pentland Firth.	VP14	The surrounding landscape is predominantly pastureland and there are few trees. Key views are gained west to Dunnet Head, and across the Pentland Firth to Orkney. The Castle and its woodlands are significant from the A836 and other minor roads between it and the coast, particularly from the east. The flat nature of the surrounding landscape limits views of the policies which are enclosed within the woodlands to the south and the policy walls to the north.
Tongue House				-	LB18458	A	Tongue	Tongue House dates to between 1678 and 1750, and a three-storey, four-ay crowstepped block facing east/west, with two-storey wings to the northwest.	VP17	The principal elevation is north-west facing with view across the Kyle of Tongue towards Talmine. The house and associated buildings sits are walled and are surrounded by woodland that screens immediate views.

Muckle House Crofthouse, Rackwick			-	LB46376	B	Rackwick	Muckle House is a mid-19th century, single-storey, roughly rectangular-plan, crofthouse with late-20th century alterations. Adjoining the east gable is a lower former byre. The walls are built of flagstone rubble and have gable end walls and the roof is turf covered flagstone. To the north and at right angles is a detached, single-storey, three-bay cottage, built between 1880 and 1900. The buildings are on falling ground and located close to the shore at Rackwick Bay on the island of Hoy. The group of buildings, and the area, has a close historical association with the composer Peter Maxwell Davies and the author George Mackay Brown.	VP21	The location of croft and fishing communities can provide valuable information about changing settlement patterns and land-use. Rackwick is a coastal valley located on the dramatic west coast of Hoy, the westernmost island in Orkney. Vertical red-sandstone sea cliffs, the tallest in the UK, rise up on either side of the valley. This area takes the full force of Atlantic gales and has a warm microclimate in the summer. Rackwick has a substantial proportion of upstanding remains of earlier dwellings and buildings, showing the 19th century scattered settlement pattern. The arrangement of the buildings remains largely unchanged from that shown on the 2nd Edition Ordnance Survey map. Some buildings have been restored as accommodation while others survive as roofless shells or as lower courses of their walls. Collectively, the level of survival and lack of later development and alteration at Rackwick makes it among the best examples of a pre-Improvement farming settlement in Orkney. Muckle House is in a remote and dramatic coastal location surrounded by cliffs and hills. Located close to the shore towards the centre of the bay it is a prominent building in the landscape. The building is inter-visible with the heather-thatched Burnmouth Bothy (LB46375). Further turf roofed buildings at Rackwick include The Mount (LB46377) and the Crow's Nest Museum to the north. Collectively, these buildings all show traditional vernacular methods of construction and therefore contribute to the built heritage and historic character of the wider settlement at Rackwick.
Crow's Nest (Craa Nest) Museum including crofthouse, barn, circular kiln and net store			-	LB52548	A	Rackwick	Crow's Nest (known locally as Craa Nest or Craa's Nest) is an 18th century croft including crofthouse with an adjoining barn and circular kiln to the west, and a detached net store or bothy to the south, restored in 1991/92 as part of a local museum. It is situated on the lower slopes of Moor Fea at Rackwick on the island of Hoy.	VP21	The remote hillside setting of Crow's Nest adds considerably to its special interest in listing terms. The location of croft and fishing communities can provide valuable information about changing settlement patterns and land-use. Vertical red-sandstone sea cliffs, the tallest in the UK, rise up on either side of the valley. Some buildings have been restored as holiday accommodation while others survive as roofless shells. Overall, the level of survival and lack of later development and alteration at Rackwick makes it among the best examples of a pre-Improvement farming settlement in Orkney.

							The Crow's Nest's relationship with its immediate and wider surroundings and its landscape, including views down over the wide arc of Rackwick Bay is exceptional. It is a prominent building in the Rackwick Bay landscape, located on a hillside surrounded by dramatic red sandstone cliffs and hills. Crow's Nest is intervisible with other thatched buildings, including Burnmouth Bothy (LB46375), The Mount (LB46377) and Muckle House (LB46376). There is also a small cottage at Glen House which currently houses the Rackwick archive. The Old School House is conserved as part of the local museum group along with Crow's Nest and a heather-thatched threshing barn (see separate listing, LB52547). Collectively, these buildings show traditional vernacular methods of construction and therefore contribute to the built heritage and historic character of Rackwick.
The Mount	-	LB46377	B	Rackwick	The first documentary reference to a township at Rackwick is in Lord Henry Sinclair's Rental of 1492. The earliest identified inhabitants settled there following a shipwreck in 1679 (Rendall, 2006). It is not known how long a farmstead has occupied the site of The Mount, but the current buildings are thought to largely date from the late 18th or earlier 19th century, with the cottage likely dating from the earlier 19th century. The buildings are first shown in their current plan-form on the 1st Edition Ordnance Survey Map (surveyed 1880), but an earlier provenance is indicated by the relatively high position on the hillside, and the thickness and construction method of the cottage walls. The higher land was likely to have been more readily cultivable than the wetter ground on the valley floor. The Mount is understood to have been in use as a working farmstead until the 1930s or 40s. By 1965, repair works had been carried out at North House, including a restoration of the but-and-ben interior with twin box-beds. The exterior and interior of the cottage have not changed since that date.	VP21	The cottage and associated ancillary buildings at the Mount are set within an open hillside landscape and are part of the remote coastal settlement of Rackwick on the island of Hoy, Orkney. The location of crofting and fishing communities can provide valuable information about changing settlement patterns and land-use. Rackwick is a coastal valley located on the dramatic west coast of Hoy, the westernmost island in Orkney. It is prominently located on a hillside surrounded by red sandstone cliffs and hills. The cottage retains its associated ancillary buildings and walled enclosures. While these buildings only partially survive (2021), and are excluded from the listing, they help demonstrate its function as a croft and contribute to the interest of its immediate setting. As part of a wider settlement, the Mount is also within sight of other thatched buildings, including the nearby Crow's Nest (LB42548), which is slightly further up the hill to the west, and Burnmouth Bothy (LB46375) and Muckle House (LB46376) which are located much closer to the sea. There is also a small cottage at Glen House which currently houses the Rackwick archive. The Old School House is conserved as part of a local museum group along with Crow's Nest and a heather-thatched threshing barn (LB52547). Collectively, these buildings show traditional vernacular methods of construction and therefore contribute greatly to the built heritage and historic character of Rackwick.
Burnmouth Bothy	-	LB46375	A	Rackwick	Burnmouth Bothy is a largely intact and rare example of a traditional 19th century Orkney crofthouse with adjoining byre and walled enclosure. These vernacular buildings were once prolific across Orkney, but are now extremely rare. The building has been restored but retains a significant proportion of its 19th century form and fabric. The Glen	-	LB52547	C	Rackwick	Two parallel rectangular-plan, single-storey, rubble-built threshing barns of mid-19th century construction, located to the immediate west of Glen (house and former farmstead), Rackwick, Hoy, Orkney. The slightly larger barn to the south has a small opening (winnowing door) set at the ground level to the south elevation. The north elevation has a doorway with a boarded timber door. The roof is heather thatched with a turf under-lay and is secured with wire and weight-stones. There are projecting flagstones at the wallhead eaves. The smaller barn to the north is of similar construction. Its former turf and heather over flagstone roof covering was replaced with metal sheeting in 2016. The flagstones are propped against the side of the building. The doorway is in the south side, facing the door of the larger barn. There is a flagstone-floored closs (narrow passage) between the two barns. The interior of the larger barn (seen 2019) is a single space containing a 19th or early 20th century threshing machine of timber construction.	VP21	The threshing barns at Glen are part of a 19th–20th century farmstead that includes a house and other agricultural buildings and enclosures, set within the remote coastal settlement of Rackwick on the island of Hoy, Orkney. The location of crofting and fishing communities can provide valuable information about changing settlement patterns and land-use. Rackwick is a coastal valley and settlement located on the dramatic west coast of Hoy, the westernmost island in Orkney. Vertical red-sandstone sea cliffs, the tallest in the UK, rise up on either side of the valley. This area takes the full force of Atlantic gales and has a warm microclimate in the summer. The coastal setting is largely unaltered and contributes to the setting of these and other listed buildings at Rackwick (see below). Rackwick has a substantial amount of upstanding remains of earlier dwellings and buildings, showing the 19th century scattered settlement pattern as shown on the 2nd Edition Ordnance Survey map (revised 1900). Some buildings have been restored as holiday accommodation while others survive as roofless shells. Overall, the level of survival and lack of later development and alteration at Rackwick makes it among the best examples of a pre-Improvement farming settlement in Orkney. The threshing barns at Glen are prominent within an important wider group of surviving vernacular buildings at Rackwick, Hoy. They are located on the roadside opposite the former school of 1879 (now a small hostel), and near the earlier restored 'Old School House' and a red telephone kiosk. The threshing barns are also near the listed thatched cottages known as the Crow's Nest (LB52548) and The Mount (LB46377). The Crow's Nest and Old School House are conserved and open to the public as part of a local museum group containing information about the history of Rackwick and its occupants. There is also a small 20th century cottage known as 'Glen House' which houses the Rackwick archive. Collectively, these buildings show traditional vernacular methods of construction over at least a two-hundred-year period and contribute considerably to the built heritage and historic character of the settlement at Rackwick.
Hall of Clestrain	-	LB19892	A	Orphir	The Hall of Clestrain is an 18th century villa in its original designed landscape setting. It is largely single-phase of c1750, and ceased being a family residence in the mid-20th century. The house straddles the old Stromness to Orphir road and is aligned with it, with the principal elevation facing south. It is on three floors with an attic and is almost square in plan with three bays to each elevation. An	Wireline I	The hall stands within a rectilinear arrangement of even sized fields which are characteristic of some parts of the Orkney landscape. These landscapes might be associated with particular estates or a particular approach in land management. The 'squaring' or rectilinear division is significant surviving evidence, but the landscape did not necessarily look the same way in the mid-18th century when the hall was built. outbuilding to the northwest was formerly matched by another on the northeast as a pair of flanking pavilions. The principal rooms were located on the first floor with bedrooms above and service rooms below. To the southeast there is a large walled garden which contains a circular ornamental pond, now considerably overgrown. A number of agricultural buildings of low quality are located alongside the walled garden.

Apart from its architectural significance, the hall is highly significant as the birthplace of John Rae, the Arctic explorer (1813-1893). Rae grew up at the house and learned to sail, shoot and fish in the area around it. He went on to become a doctor with the Hudson's Bay Company and mapped large parts of the north coast of Canada, largely on foot. He also discovered the last navigable link in what became the route for Roald Amundsen to sail through the North West Passage in 1903-1906.

The setting of Hall of Clestrain possibly has not changed significantly since its first construction in 1750. It is possible that the north-south axis which is part of its aesthetic predates the 'squaring' of the landscape around into fields. The relationship between the house and the shore will be similar to the original relationship although the position of the public road has changed.

The principal views from the hall are from the first-floor windows to the south, west and north. In the views to the west there is an important view to Stromness and Hoy. When viewed from the hall, Stromness would have been an obvious place of trade and prosperity; and our perception of the landscape of Hoy is influenced by the Romantic Movement in Scotland promoted by the writings of Walter Scott and 19th century artists. The perception of the builder, Patrick Honeyman when he built Hall of Clestrain would have been different. A near contemporary map of Drummore House in east Lothian shows that landscapes could be set out with an understanding of a field of views towards various sites, both natural and antiquities. It is possible that the best views being to the west influenced the positioning of the principal rooms in the house; the drawing and dining rooms. It would also have influenced the positioning of the subsidiary buildings which are aligned with the north corners of Hall of Clestrain possibly to avoid blocking the views.

John Rae would have been aware of these views and the relationship of the gap between Hoy and Stromness being a gateway to Canada for the Hudson's Bay Company. Stromness would have been a busy place with a herring fleet. Early photographs show the harbour full of boats. This might have included boats for whaling. (Simpson & Brown, 2020).
